

A PT workshop which included information from the prosthetics team, here learning about the components of prosthetics.

Three of the licensed PTs present at the workshop.

A new Rehabilitation center with goals to offer all of these services recently opened up on the university grounds. I spent some time consulting with them.

The gym area at the new center.

My surprise farewell party was a table full of delicious local fruit and relaxed time with the staff at the new center. I worked with the staff some on a consultant basis to help them set up systems to help distinguish them for students who will be passing through.

A group of students in the clinical rotations are discussing treatment ideas for a young woman with spinal cord injury, with their professor looking on.

The month of November is celebrated as the month of the family here. A team from church went house to house inviting all to join us one Sunday in an effort to unite families in Christ, our solid foundation. We held the service outside that day and had a family psychologist come to speak.

Additionally some of the youth did a little drama representing the choices that can be made and their effects. Lala did a great job representing the one whose choices led to an early pregnancy. Thankfully at another time she has told me that she plans to wait until after the university to start a family.

All ages came to the celebration of the family. This little girls visits my next door neighbors regularly and was being coy with me as I took the picture.

My backyard as Hurricane Sandy passed over Cuba and Haiti on its way to the NE.

South Carolina sends a medical team to the DR regularly and this fall included Santa Fe in their itinerary. This doctor works through his translator to serve members of the community.
