My students are practicing goniometry of the hip.

My students are practicing manual muscle testing.

My students are practicing functional tests.

The Episcopal Diocese had their 2014 convention in the capital this year. Here is the Santa Fe delegation at the near table listening to the talk about how the process will work for searching for our bishop adjutor.

Las Chicas Nices del Senor were invited to sing for part of the entertainment evening but there was a scarcity of housing available. Since I use a one bedroom apartment on the cathedral grounds, the 14 of us stayed together there. After they arrived, we went up to the apartment to get ready.

Here we are running through our songs one time before dinner.

The next morning we shared devotions before heading downstairs. Victoria Freeman (Lila), reading the bible in this picture, joined our Lord on April 22, 2014. RIP.

Here they come, looking focused on getting some coffee!

We always have a parade with the convention. Here are some of the seminarians I've come to know while staying at the apartment in the capital 1-2 nights a week.

The route went along the malecon and around this obelisk. And it is definitely not a Dominican parade if there aren't flag teams along. This flag team is from one of the Episcopal schools in the country.
