Sunset one evening at a nearby beach while I was taking a break from the noise offered by the 'dias paternas' in front of my house.

December 12, 2015 was the dedication celebration of our new temple. The next set of pictures is from that special day.

Here is a before and after picture of the building.

We had a short procession from the temporary temple space we used to the new space and Las Chicas Nice were in our new uniforms, with Las Chiquitas Nice along with us. (Photo by Julius Ariail, Diocesan photographer from Georgia.)

We had a couple of flag bearers from the school form a pathway for the procession to enter by.

After Bishop Julio Cesar Holguin blessed the baptismal font, the lectern, the pulpit and the altar, members of the church then dressed them for use. Here Quisqueya and Berkys are preparing the altar.

We had visiting clergy here for our special day and they joined in the blessing of the sacraments.

The vestry chose to give particular thanks to the Tampa Deanery for their years of dedication to completing the temple construction by presenting Bill Kunkle with a memorial plaque.

The vestry also chose 3 humble servants from our congregation who worked faithfully to help with the completion as well. Here they are at work, a few days prior to the dedication spreading the gravel in our parking lot.

In the fall I had a couple of classes in addition to a clinical rotation. Here are some of my therapeutic exercise students taking the written portion of their final exam.

The PT association offered a continuing education afternoon and asked me to teach on exercise. Victor taught about pediatric motor learning. He is a professor at PUCMM, the other university in the country that offers PT. It was an honor sharing the podium with him.

There had been hopes for a larger crowd, but at least these folks took advantage of the opportunity.

A group shot with my students from the clinical rotation this fall.

The youth and young adults of the diocese are quite dynamic. In November they put on the Episcopal Fest, featuring various musical groups from around the diocese. The final song brought all back up on stage to sing the Batalla de la Fe (the Battle of the Faith) together, led by Las Chicas Nice.

Not being artistic myself, I am quite impressed with the creativity of these snowmen. They were made by some students in our Episcopal school with plastic cups stapled together.
